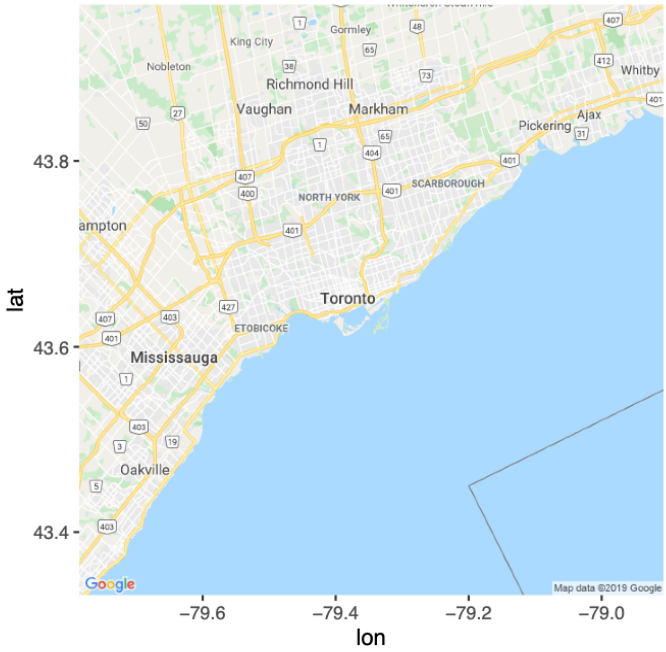
Exploring Toronto's Cycling Open Data

Hibah N

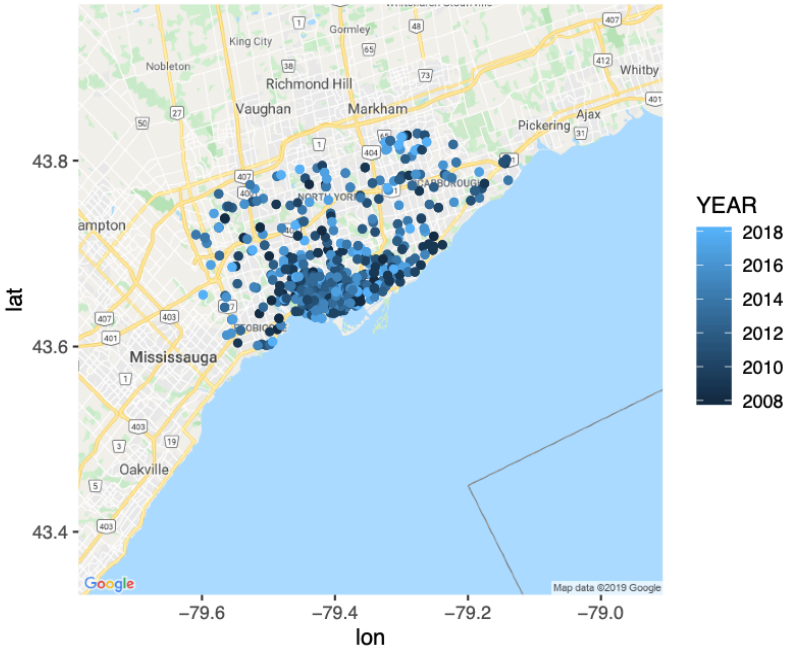
2019-11-17

Bare map of Toronto

```
Source : https://maps.googleapis.com/maps/api/staticmap?center=43.65107,-79.347015&zoom=10&size=640x
```

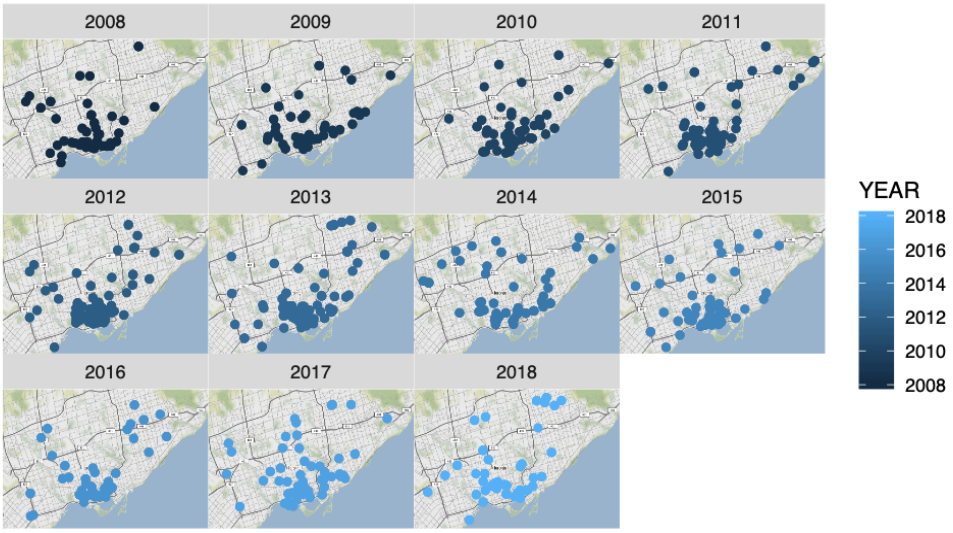


Plotting Cycling data



Color mapped to Year

```
Source : http://tile.stamen.com/terrain/11/570/745.png
Source : http://tile.stamen.com/terrain/11/571/745.png
Source : http://tile.stamen.com/terrain/11/572/745.png
Source : http://tile.stamen.com/terrain/11/573/745.png
Source : http://tile.stamen.com/terrain/11/570/746.png
Source : http://tile.stamen.com/terrain/11/571/746.png
Source : http://tile.stamen.com/terrain/11/572/746.png
Source : http://tile.stamen.com/terrain/11/573/746.png
Source : http://tile.stamen.com/terrain/11/570/747.png
Source : http://tile.stamen.com/terrain/11/571/747.png
Source : http://tile.stamen.com/terrain/11/572/747.png
Source : http://tile.stamen.com/terrain/11/573/747.png
```



I've now used 'YEAR' as a facet wrap, so we can see how cycling accidents change from year to year

In the plot displayed below, I've added 'INJURY' into the mix. Looking at the plots, we can see that after 2013, there are less occurences of 'major' injuries. Unsurprisingly, it seems that most collisions occur in the downtown area.